Trade Manage Capital integrates Cameron's newest High Availability Fix Engine

February 14, 2006 - Saddle Brook, New Jersey – Trade Manage Capital, Inc. (“Trade Manage”) today announced that it has upgraded its highly successful Cameron System’s FIX Engine to Cameron’s High Availability (“HA”) FIX solution. Trade Manage Capital currently utilizes FIX engine technologies from several FIX vendors, yet the Cameron technologies handle the Firm’s most mission-critical order flow. By integrating Cameron’s newest HA Engine, Trade Manage now ensures that in the event of momentary or more long-lasting engine failures, hot-swap redundant FIX systems are better able to assume order flow seamlessly and with minimal disruption.

Cameron’s HA Engine offers real-time, auto-swapping fail-over from a primary FIX engine to another Engine in the event of a disruption to the service or operation of the primary technologies. Real-time trade data is replicated from the primary server to the backup system throughout the trading day during normal operations. In the event that the primary server ever fails, the secondary server comes online within seconds with all current data necessary to continue with minimal, if any, interruption.

Steve Goldman, Trade Manage’s Chief Executive Officer commented, “Handling institutional order flow is mission critical irrespective of order size. And yet, despite any firms’ best efforts and investment, technology failures occur. The Cameron HA Engine gives us a strong, additional comfort level so that if a failure does occur, we can continue operating with minimal impact to our clients or our trading desk. Cameron continues to lead the way in providing the highest quality FIX engine and other routing solutions at affordable prices.”
